Banya Treatment (60 minutes)

Rooted in Eastern European culture, the banya treatment utilises hot and cold temperature contrasts to effectuate a profound detoxification and relaxation.

Within the wood-clad sauna, dry heat encourages deep perspiration, releasing impurities, stimulating circulation and strengthening respiratory function. Veniks, fragrant bundles of oak or birch leaves, are lightly heated and soaked before applied to the body in percussive brushing motions to stimulate the skin while releasing essential oils that calm the mind, supporting lymphatic flow and relieving muscle tension. Eucalyptus leaves, chilled in ice water, are placed upon the head to ground the nervous system.

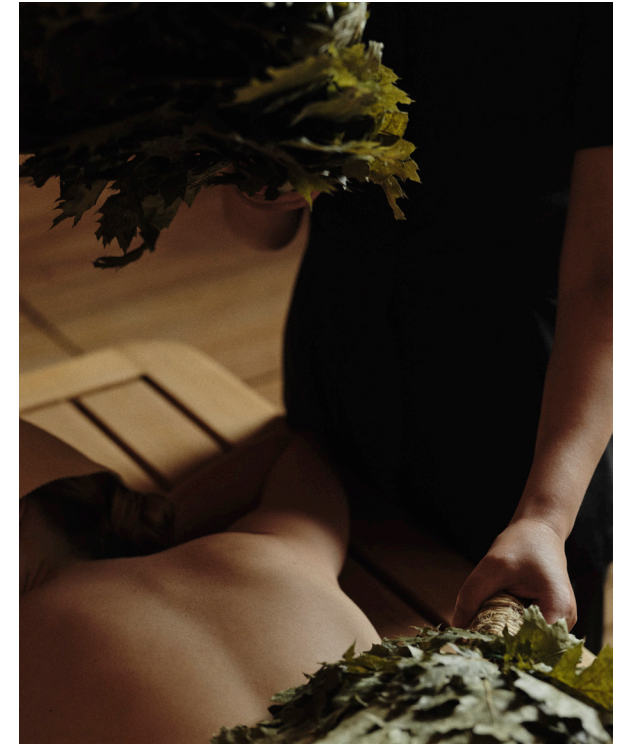

Guided transitions from the sauna session to the cooling bucket shower and cold plunge create a healing contrast, culminating in a final immersion, where the body is given time to recover as it is held and gently swayed in the warmth of the hot bath, improving blood flow to the skin and tissues as well as reducing blood pressure.

After experiencing these rounds of heat and concentrated physical sensation, the mind and body are guided into an all-encompassing meditative state.

Hammam Treatment (60 minutes)

Hammams, with origins in the Roman Empire, hold cultural significance across regions, from the Middle East and Turkey to Morocco, where they have long served as spaces for both ritual purification and social gathering.

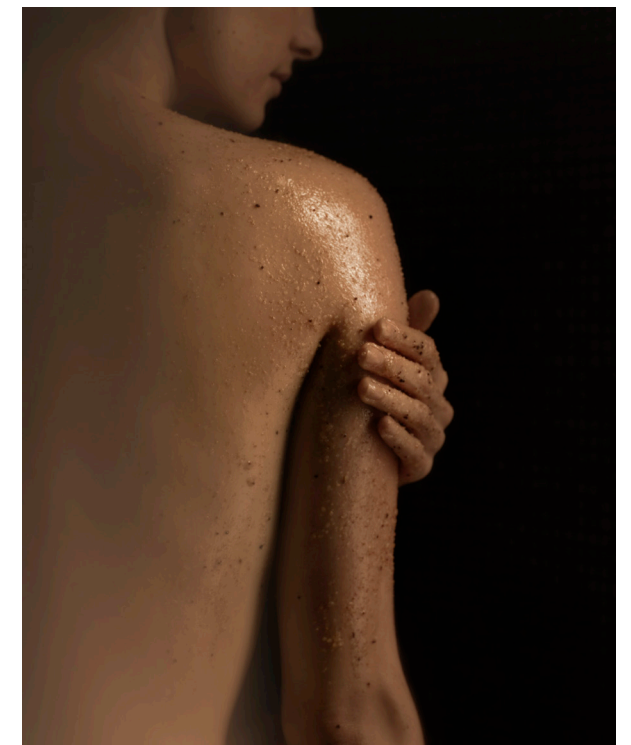

The hammam treatment takes place in the marble-clad steam room and includes a steam bath experience and full-body scrub, cleanse and massage. Traditional domed ceilings, thermal stone surfaces and hand-cut mosaic tilework create an immersive and calming environment and allow heat to radiate evenly throughout the space.

Guests begin by laying on a heated marble slab as steam surrounds the body, opening the pores and promoting deep hydration. The hammam therapist then performs a gentle body scrub utilising a traditional mit to stimulate circulation, and a cleansing ritual with black soap, preparing the body for an invigorating massage which completes the experience.
